WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

 Gusty westerly winds in The Delta region next few days ***

Higher pressure will return to the region starting today and gradually get stronger to bring in warmer temperatures. There is some chance a small weather system will arrive from off the Pacific Friday that could stir up a better chance of isolated afternoon and evening and mostly wet thunderstorms across the northern and eastern mountains, otherwise conditions will be dry across the region for the next 7 days. Early next week appears somewhat cooler with more seasonable temperatures again as another, larger-but-not-terribly-strong trough moves over the Pacific NW and the region.

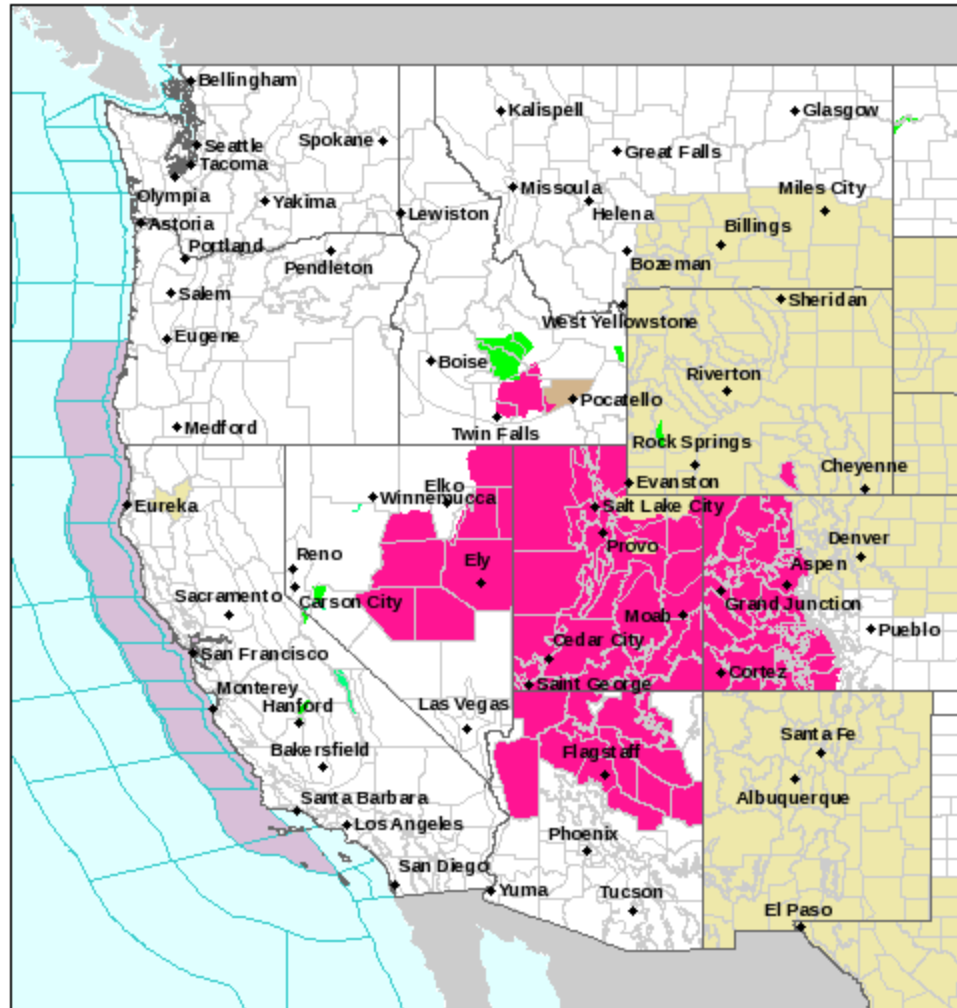

Outside of some gusty winds in The Delta region through at least Thursday with 20-30 mph gusts reasonably common in the favored areas, no significant winds are expected across the region this week. Some relatively light northerly winds may develop late this weekend. The warmest inland areas are expected to range from 100-105 through the weekend with some chance of a bit of cooling Friday if that low actually moves into the region. In general, afternoon highs will be 5-10 degrees above normal in the warmest areas.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Breezy in and near the desert today ***

Strengthening onshore pressure gradients will generate breezy conditions in and near the desert areas today. Expect winds of 20-30 mph in the desert interface regions such as the Kern County Mountains and the Antelope Valley. Today, similar wind speeds can be expected with the strongest winds shifting toward the Kern County Mountains. It will also be breezy along the central coast during the afternoon hours where northwest winds of 10-20 mph will be possible during the afternoon. A cooling trend is expected over the next 3 days across some of the inland valleys and lower foothills with temperatures sliding 2-4 degrees each day. By tomorrow, highs will range from the upper 80s to lower 90s in the valleys to 108 in the desert. Onshore flow is expected to weaken Friday, allowing temperatures to warm back into the mid and upper 90s in the valleys. This weekend, expect sunny skies with temperature 5-8 degrees above normal with light winds. No convection is expected through the period.
